

Reporting Phone Scams

If you lost money from a phone scam or if you have information about a phone scammer, report the incident on the Federal Trade Commission web site using this link: www.ReportFraud.ftc.gov

If you have Caller ID on your phone, write down the number and any other information that appears on your phone. If possible, take a screenshot.

Report the phone number and information that appears from the phone call — even if you think it might be fake. You can include the phone number used by the phone scammer as well as any number you were given to call back.

If you are not a victim of a phone scam but want to report a suspicious call, you can use the reporting form on this website: www.DoNotCall.gov.

The report you submit can help law enforcement identify people who are involved in making illegal calls. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) reviews all complaints and looks for frequent callers to identify illegal callers based on calling patterns. In addition, the FTC uses information you report to track down scammers.

The FTC releases suspicious phone numbers that are reported to the public every business day. This helps phone companies and others who are involved with call-blocking and call-labeling.
